Red Rock Resources: El Limon gold mine starts production

Tuesday, December 21, 2010 by Jamie Ashcroft

Test production is now underway at the El Limon gold mine in Colombia

Red Rock Resources (LON:RRR) has reported the start of gold production at the El Limon mine in Colombia.

Test production is now underway, starting at 30 tonnes per day. This will subsequently be ramped up after Christmas.

The El Limon plant will be running at around with 150 tonnes per day by mid-January.

Red Rock said that there was a slight delay to the start-up of the initial operations, and the commissioning of the larger flotation cell circuit - which is necessary for full capacity operation - has been delayed by around three weeks.

Red Rock has an interest in the El Limon and La Aurora gold mines, through a co-operation agreement with Mineras Four Points SA (MFP). The company secured financing for MFP in return for options over its share capital and consultancy work/fees.

Red Rock believes that MFP provides it with a low-risk entry into the Colombian gold mining industry.

Meanwhile, Red Rock noted that drilling is ongoing at its projects in Kenya and it updated investors on the progress being made on the Arthur River tenement in Tasmania.

At Arthur River, the company believes it has encountered a magnetite amphibolite dyke.

Initially a 4-hole drilling programme was testing a previously undrilled 3 kilometre North-South magnetic anomaly.

In the fourth hole Red Rock encountered mineralisation just before drilling ended.

Subsequently, it believes that the four holes were drilled down-dip from the target, therefore it decided to drill a fifth hole.

The fifth hole encountered, and ended in, magnetite mineralisation with veinlets of massive magnetite.
